Case Scenarios

Scenario 1:
You just received your math mid-term, and the grade on your paper was much lower than what you expected. You studied extremely hard for this exam and thought you were well prepared. You don’t understand why you missed some of the problems you did or how the final grade was determined.

If you challenged the process, what would that look like?

What is the best that could happen?

What is the worst that could happen?

Should you challenge the process? Why or why not?

How would you go about it (what would you say, what would you do, how would you act)?
Scenario 2:
Your school has just instituted a new policy on fundraising, and your student organization is only allowed one fundraiser a year. Your group counts on several fundraisers throughout the year to support activities, community service projects, and funding students’ attendance at local, state, and national conferences. You are worried this new policy is going to have a negative impact on your organization.

If you challenged the process, what would that look like?

What is the best that could happen?

What is the worst that could happen?

Should you challenge the process? Why or why not?

How would you go about it (what would you say, what would you do, how would you act)?
Scenario 3:
As a senior, you are starting to receive admittance letters from the colleges you applied to. You have been accepted to a couple of local schools, but the college you have had your heart set on for the past four years has denied you.

If you challenged the process, what would that look like?

What is the best that could happen?

What is the worst that could happen?

Should you challenge the process? Why or why not?

How would you go about it (what would you say, what would you do, how would you act)?
Scenario 4:
You have been dating your girlfriend/boyfriend for several months now, and you really enjoy spending time with this person. It seems like lately, s/he has to know where you are at all hours of the day. If you are not with this person, s/he is calling or texting asking where you are and what you are doing.

If you challenged the process, what would that look like?

What is the best that could happen?

What is the worst that could happen?

Should you challenge the process? Why or why not?

How would you go about it (what would you say, what would you do, how would you act)?
Scenario 5:
You just learned your employer is going to have to cut back due to the recent economic issues. You are saving money for a spring break trip with your friends’ family and won’t be able to go if you lose your job. You are not sure if your hours will be cut back or if you will be let go altogether.

If you challenged the process, what would that look like?

What is the best that could happen?

What is the worst that could happen?

Should you challenge the process? Why or why not?

How would you go about it (what would you say, what would you do, how would you act)?
Scenario 6:
You feel like your parents have been busier than ever recently, and even though you enjoy your independence you miss spending time with them. You use to eat dinner together on a regular basis, and now you feel lucky if you see each other in the mornings before you race out the door.

If you challenged the process, what would that look like?

What is the best that could happen?

What is the worst that could happen?

Should you challenge the process? Why or why not?

How would you go about it (what would you say, what would you do, how would you act)?